What's New in the SAuto-Clicker?

The mouse is the keyboard of your desktop, and it is very useful for repetitive tasks. But if it is left unused for a long time, it might get dirty, and the buttons will cease to work. sAuto-Clicker automatically clicks your mouse at regular intervals, providing a quick solution to finding out whether it works. It takes a single command line with parameters as input and it creates a log file for viewing the results of the tests. It takes just a few seconds to carry out your research, and it won't negatively impact system resources. Description: sAuto-Clicker is a neat utility that lets you test your mouse's left, middle and right buttons by means of automated clicks. It doesn't require any installation and it works without having to write any lines of code. Just run the application and wait for it to finish the task. The software takes as input a single command line with parameters and makes a log file for viewing the results of the tests. Key features: - simple to use - not CPU or RAM intensive - shows whether your mouse buttons work or not - runs only a single command line and requires no installations - creates a log file for viewing results - offers options for left, middle and right button tests - takes just a few seconds to carry out your research - works on all computers without requiring .NET Framework Description: Prazine is an open source software tool that lets you measure the travel time of a mouse movement. It is a useful application for measurement of mouse movement speed and latency in video games. After installation, Prazine will run automatically and show your mouse's latency and speed for moving from one point to another. The program supports configurable and individually measured testing, it can also view test results as a graph. Prazine can be used for measuring the speed of mouse movement in 3D games or 2D titles with mouse based controls. The program measures the time it takes for the mouse cursor to travel from one point to another, in pixels or coordinates. When the mouse's vertical or horizontal movements are recorded, you can easily get the latency in pixels or coordinates. Moreover, Prazine can process frame by frame data for the purpose of recording the full movement path. This is very useful in case of slow and jerky movements. Using Prazine, you can compare the latency or movement speed of two or more mice, or you can get a comparative overview of your mouse's behavior. It can work without having to write any lines of code and it doesn't require any installations. Key features: - easily configurable and automatically run - visualizes results in the form of graphs and tables - provides options
